The San River's trout

The San River in south-east Poland holds a huge population of wild brown trout as well as the Huchen – the Danube Salmon, or more universally known of as the taimen. The trout, in particular, become very active from early March and into April, preying heavily on fish fry and leeches, making outstanding opportunities for streamer fishing.

Streamer introduction

In Britain, unlike the US and most of Europe, streamer fishing is considered more a still-water technique and is less commonly employed on rivers. March, with the big San flows, provides a period to radically alter the fly fishers perspective of the possibilities with early season trout fishing! Stripping through the depths with appropriate streamer patterns provides a fulfilling and very exciting means of extending fly fishing skills. Six/Seven weight rods of nine and a half or ten feet length, stealth or sink-tip lines, are required. Neoprene chest waders or thermal under clothing beneath breathable waders (preferable) are advised, with warm clothing throughout (even though March days can be delightfully warm here, the water temperature is low. Be prepared for some deep wading.

Trips

Based on long weekends we suggest 3 full fishing days which is easier with the new plane schedules. We suggest groups of 3-4 anglers.
